

I follow what my parent said: to get into a good university to study engineering. I know I don't like what I am studying, but I am also not bad at it.

This is what I was meant to be.

I completed my degree and immediately got a good job in a big company that many people might have wished for. I think my life isn't too bad overall.

But sometimes, I still can't help but think what I would be like in another parallel world? Maybe I would have believe in myself enough to get through tons of challenges and eventually become a famous animator?

The only thing I know is that, I never watch anime anymore.
