

Eventually, I am absorbed by the screen.
I have been caged into the virtual black hole alone, which has nothing but infinitely dark space. And I never come back again.

I regret that I choose to escape while facing difficulties. I should have more confidence on my work and myself so I won't easily give up while facing others' opposition and critique.

I discover that there are so many good stories out there. I pick an anime that I like the most. Then I create my own by redrawing its characters' looks while copying its' story. I post my work on the internet and it gains popularity very suddenly. Everyone seems to think that these are my original ideas.

I...

should stop plagiarizing and go to art school to learn

continue to create my works by copying others' stories
